SHIPBUILDING IN U. S.
BREAKS ALL RECORDS
Amount of Construction Exceeds That of Rest of World.

The American output of merchant ships for the calendar year will exceed that of all the rest of the world, Chief Chamberlain, of the United States Bureau of Navigation, today predicted.

This year will be the first in fifty years that the United States has led in shipbuilding, he said.

He declared figures by the Department of Commerce, indicated a total output of 31 steel ships with a total of $72,100 gross tons. For the first six months, ships totaling in tonnage nearly 30,000 have slid down the ways. This is more than the entire output for 1914 or 1915.

Chamberlain declared the loss to the world's commerce in the decline of shipbuilding since the war is greater than the loss through the destruction of vessels.

Stout Men, Don't Wear

Miss Heins is vice president and manager of her concern.

"A well dressed man," says Miss Heins, "is a man who is so dressed that after you have left him you couldn't for the life of you recall what kind of a suit he was wearing. Fat men should never wear broad stripes. The stripes accentuate their fatness. For the same reason they should not wear light clothes."
